

Social Security: Illinois Quick Facts

Illinois's aged population is expanding.

In 2003, Illinois's population was about 12,654,000, with 12% being age 65 and older (1,507,000 residents).¹ In 2015, the 65+ population will make up 14% of the state's population, and in 2025, it will be 17%.^{2,3}

Illinois ranks 15th in income level among the U.S. states.

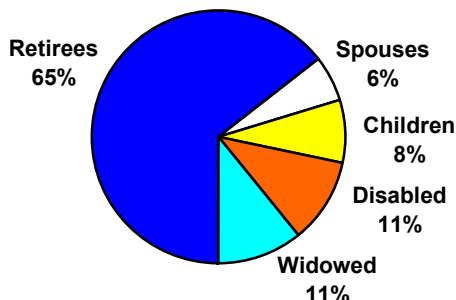

The average personal income in Illinois was $29,074 in 2003. Illinois's per capita income (15th) ranks lower than Minnesota (10th), but higher than any other Midwest state.⁴

One in seven Illinois residents receives Social Security.

The Social Security program not only provides monthly benefits to retired workers, but also to families when the worker retires, dies, or becomes disabled. In 2003, over 47 million Americans received Social Security benefits; of these, 1,872,890 live in Illinois.⁵

In 2003, one in seven Illinois residents received Social Security. While 65% of beneficiaries are retirees, 35% are not: 200,730 are widows and widowers; 200,490 are disabled workers; 154,980 are children; and 102,850 are wives and husbands.⁶

Illinois Social Security Beneficiaries

Social Security pumps nearly 20 billion dollars into Illinois's economy.

In 2003, Illinois residents received 19.7 billion dollars from Social Security.⁶ The average yearly Social Security benefit for an Illinois retiree in 2003 was $11,532—or about $961 a month.⁵

Nearly all Illinois residents age 65 or older receive Social Security.

Nationally, almost 16% of all people receive Social Security benefits; in Illinois, 15% of residents do. However, older people are more likely to receive the benefit, with 91% of those over age 65 receiving it nationwide, and 91% of older Illinois residents receiving it.¹

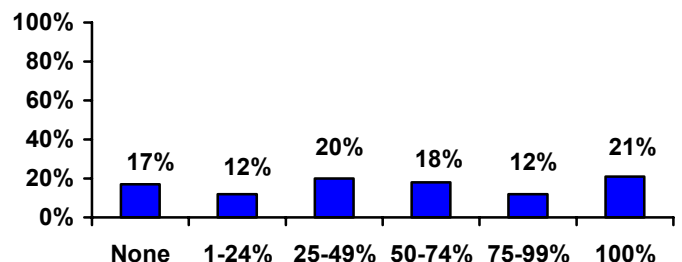

Social Security lifts nearly half of retirees from poverty.

Nearly half (47%) of the nation's older population would be living in poverty if they were not receiving Social Security. In Illinois, 48% of state's 65+ population (569,000 people) would have incomes below the poverty line if they did not have Social Security.⁷

Social Security is the only source of income for one in five Illinois residents age 65+.

Social Security makes up 50 percent or more of the income for half of Illinois residents age 65 and older. One in five older Illinois residents rely on Social Security as their only source of income.⁸
