Background

Long-Term Care: A Survey of AARP Members in New Mexico explores the attitudes and opinions of 972 AARP members in New Mexico about long-term care. More specifically, the survey examines how well informed members are about long-term care, their preferences for receiving long-term care and their opinions on long-term care funding. In addition, this survey gauges state legislative priorities of AARP members in New Mexico.

This report is part of a larger mail survey of 972 New Mexico AARP members. The full annotated questionnaire is contained in the appendix to this report. Throughout the report, statistics representing member responses are reported in percentages.<sup>1</sup> In some instances, percentages are small and may not seem to represent a significant proportion of members, yet when projected to the total New Mexico membership the actual number of people may be substantial. As of September 2006, the approximate number of AARP members in New Mexico was 250,300.

Highlights

- Almost all New Mexico members believe it is important to have long-term care services that allow them or their family members to stay at home as long as possible.
- Six in ten prefer to have care provided in a home-like setting or have care provided at home.
- More than a third of members have needed or have had a family member that needed long-term care in the past five years.
- Over half indicate that they are not well informed of long-term care services that are provided either at home and in community-based settings nor are they well informed about nursing homes in the community.
- More than half indicate that it is likely that they or a family member may need long-term care services in the next five years.
- Nearly eight in ten members in New Mexico support increasing state funds for home and community-based care to decrease the two-year waiting period before Medicaid recipients can receive long-term care services at home.
  - ◆ Of these members, two-thirds would still support increasing state funds to decrease the waiting period, even if it meant an increase in taxes.

Findings

Long-Term Care Services

Nearly all New Mexico members believe it is important to have long-term care services that would enable them or their family members to stay at home as long as possible, if long-term care was needed.

Nine in ten New Mexico members say that it is extremely or very important to have long-term care services that would enable themselves or their family members to stay at home as long as possible when long-term care is needed. Roughly one in fifteen says it is somewhat important.

Importance of Having Long-Term Care Services That Would Enable Members or Their Families to Stay at Home as Long as Possible
(N = 972)

More than a third of New Mexico members or members of their family have needed long-term care in the past five years.

Members were asked whether they or any member of their family needed long-term care in the past five years. About one in three (35%) respond yes while six in ten (63%) respond no.

Nearly six in ten members in New Mexico are not well informed about long-term care services provided at home and in community-based settings in their community.

More than half (55%) of members say that they are not well informed about long-term care services provided at home and in community-based settings. Over four in ten members feel very well (10%), or fairly well (33%) informed about long-term care options.

More than half of members in New Mexico are not well informed about nursing homes in their community.

More than half of members are not well informed, while over four in ten feel very, or fairly well informed about nursing homes in their community.

Knowledge of Nursing Homes in the Community (N = 972)

Over half of New Mexico members report that they or a family member may need long-term care services in the next five years.

Likelihood That You or a Family Member May Need Long-Term Care Services in the Next Five Years (N = 972)

Over half of New Mexico members reported that it is likely that they will need long-term care services in the next five years. One in three members indicates that it is not very likely or not at all likely. About one in ten members is not sure of the likelihood of needing long-term care services.

Nearly all AARP members in New Mexico report that it is important to have services that would allow them or their family members to stay at home for as long as possible.

Members were asked if they or a family member needed long-term care services, how important it would be to have services that would allow them or their family members to stay at home for as long as possible. Over nine in ten (96%) members indicate that it is important. Only two percent report that having these services is not important.

Importance of Having Services That Would Allow You or Your Family Member to Stay at Home for as Long as Possible

More than six in ten members prefer to receive long-term care services by a nurse or personal care aide at home.

Members were asked if they needed long-term care services, how they would prefer to receive those services. More than six in ten report that they would prefer to pay a nurse or a personal care aide to provide care at home. Nearly six in ten prefer to have care provided in a home-like setting such as an assisted living facility. More than four in ten prefer to have family and friends provide care for them at their home and one in seven would prefer to be cared for in a nursing home. More than four in ten prefer to have family and friends provide care for them at their home and one in seven would prefer to be care for in a nursing home.

Preferences for Receiving Long-term Care Services

Almost eight in ten members in New Mexico support increasing state funds for home and community-based care.

Currently in New Mexico, there is a two-year waiting period for a person who is eligible for Medicaid to receive long-term care services in their home or in a community-based setting. Members were asked how strongly they support or oppose increasing state funds for home and community-based care to decrease this waiting period. Nearly eight in ten members in New Mexico report that they support increasing state funds in order to decrease this waiting period. One in seven neither support nor oppose, and five percent were opposed to this initiative.

Support/Oppose Increasing State Funds for Home and Community-Based Care to Decrease Waiting Period

Of those members who support increasing state funds for home and community-based care, two thirds would continue to support this, even if it meant an increase in the amount of taxes they paid.

Members were asked if they would continue to support increasing state funds for home and community-based care to decrease the waiting period, even if it meant an increase in the amount of taxes they paid (n=755). Two-thirds of members would continue to support the increase, while one in eight would not. One in five members are not sure.

Legislative Priorities

Members list ensuring Social Security, making prescription drugs more affordable, and reducing the money in the political process as top priorities for AARP New Mexico.

Members were asked to indicate how much of a priority it should be for AARP New Mexico to work on various legislative issues. Members were given a list of 16 different issues. The most frequent issue members cite as a top priority was ensuring that Social Security continues to provide a guaranteed base of retirement income. More than half mention making prescription drugs more affordable, reducing the influence of money in the political process, strengthening Medicare as a base for retirement health coverage, and protecting consumers from identity theft as top legislative priorities for AARP New Mexico.

Conclusions

Long-term care continues to be a salient issue in New Mexico. Although many members report that none of their family members had needed long-term care in the past five years, more than half anticipate it being an issue in the next five years. Almost all members surveyed in New Mexico demonstrate a strong preference to stay at home as long as possible, if they or a family member needed long-term care. As a matter of fact the two most common preferences are to receive care from a paid professional at home or have care provided in a home-like setting. Members also demonstrate overwhelming support to increase state funds in order to decrease the waiting period for Medicaid recipients to receive long-term care services at home. In fact, two-thirds would continue to support increasing state funds to decrease the waiting period, even if it meant an increase in taxes.

In general, members' legislative priorities are consistent with AARP's strategic priorities in New Mexico. Specifically, members report that the highest priorities for AARP New Mexico should be Social Security, prescription drugs, and reducing the influence of money in the political process. The influence of money in the political process was not included in previous surveys and in 2006 emerged as one of the top priorities mentioned by members. The emergence of "money in the political process" suggests that this may be an increasingly important issue for members in New Mexico.

Methodology

AARP conducted the 2006 AARP New Mexico Legislative Issues Survey from June 9 through July 7, 2006. A sample of 2,000 AARP members in New Mexico, proportionally stratified by three age segments, 50 to 59, 60 to 74, and 75+, was selected from AARP's membership database. Each sampled member was contacted about the survey in four ways: a pre-notification postcard, the survey itself, a reminder postcard, and a second survey. Forty-nine percent of the sampled New Mexico members returned surveys by the cut-off date, providing 972 useable surveys for analysis. Thus, the survey has a sampling error of plus or minus 3.2 percent.* Survey responses were weighted to reflect the distribution of the age segments in the member population of New Mexico. As of September 2006, the approximate number of AARP members in New Mexico was 250,264.

* This means that in 95 out of 100 samples of this size, the results obtained in the sample would fall in a range of 3.2 percentage points of what would have been obtained if every AARP member in New Mexico age 50 or older had been surveyed.
