Background

Transportation: A Survey of AARP Members in New Mexico explores the attitudes and opinions of 972 AARP members in New Mexico about transportation. More specifically, the survey examines transportation preferences of members and their opinions and experiences with community transportation programs and services. In addition, this survey gauges state legislative priorities of AARP members in New Mexico.

This report is part of a larger mail survey of 972 New Mexico AARP members. The full annotated questionnaire is contained in the appendix to this report. Throughout the report, statistics representing member responses are reported in percentages.¹ In some instances, percentages are small and may not seem to represent a significant proportion of members, yet when projected to the total New Mexico membership the actual number of people may be substantial. As of September 2006, the approximate number of AARP members in New Mexico was 250,300.

Highlights

- More than nine in ten members drive when they need to go somewhere.
- Half of members are not aware of Supplemental Transportation Programs in their community.
- Nine in ten members are satisfied with how they get around in their community.
- Seven in ten report that if they were no longer able to drive it would be difficult to get around in their current neighborhood.
- Despite less than favorable ratings on transportation characteristics in their community, seven in ten members rate their community positively when it comes down to being able to get to most places they wish to go.

¹ Percentages may not sum to 100% due to rounding.

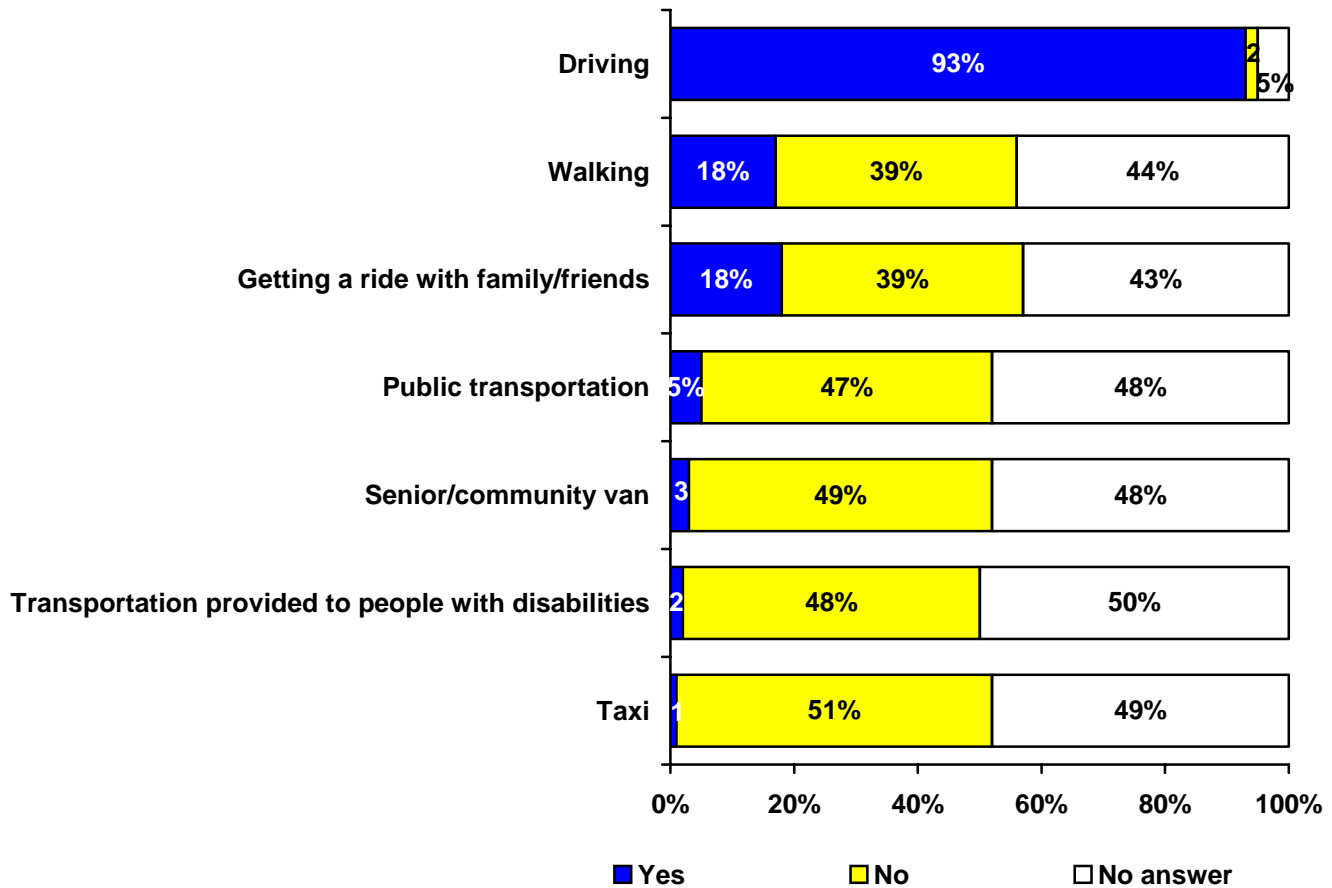

Findings

Transportation

Nine in ten members in New Mexico drive when they need to go somewhere and one in five reports walking or getting a ride with family or friends.

Nine in ten members report that they are most likely to drive when needing to go somewhere, followed by one in five who report walking and getting a ride with family or friends. Members in New Mexico are least likely to: take a taxi, use transportation provided for people with disabilities, or ride a senior or community van.

In General When You Need to Go Somewhere How Do You Get There?
(N = 972)

Half of New Mexico members are not aware of a Supplemental Transportation Program in their community.

Some communities have personal transportation systems for those persons who cannot access ordinary kinds of transportation because of health or financial limitations. These programs are referred to as Supplemental Transportation Programs. Members were asked whether they were aware of a Supplemental Transportation Program in their community. Half of members responded no (49%), while roughly four in ten (38%) responded yes, and one in ten is not sure (11%).

Nine in ten members in New Mexico are satisfied with how they get around in their community.

Members were asked how satisfied they were with how they get around in their community when they want or need to go someplace. Nine in ten are satisfied with their transportation options.

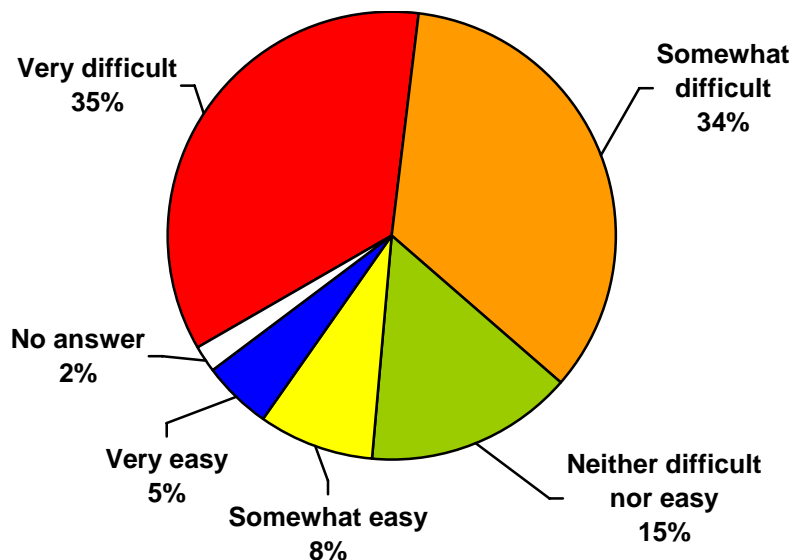

Overall Satisfaction With How You Get Around When You Want or Need to Go Someplace (N = 972)

Seven in ten members in New Mexico say that it would be difficult to continue to live in their current neighborhood if they were no longer able to drive.

Members were asked if they were no longer able to drive how difficult it would be to continue to live in their current neighborhood. Seven in ten members say that it would be difficult. Fifteen percent indicate that it would be neither difficult nor easy, and just over one in ten reports that it would be easy.

Difficulty of Living in Current Neighborhood if You Were No Longer Able to Drive*
(N = 972)

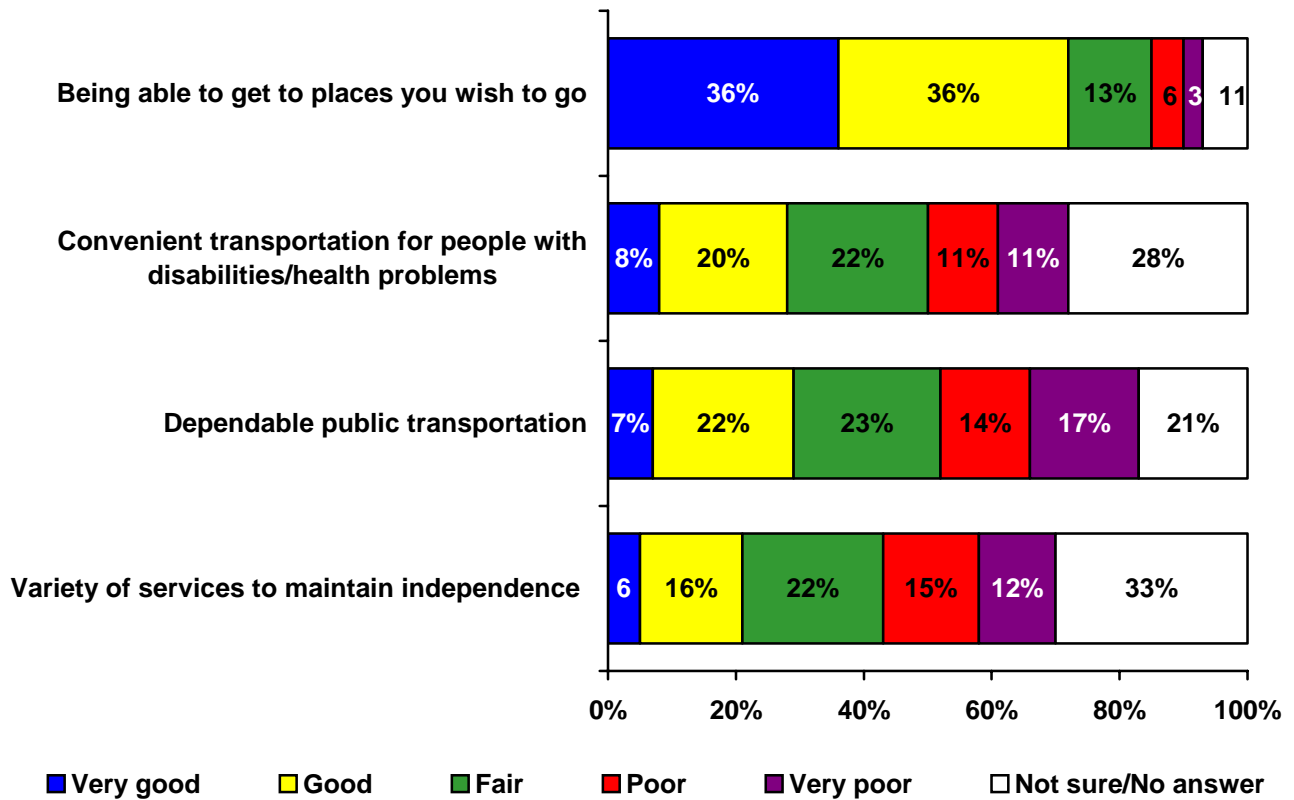

*Percentages may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

Seven in ten members in New Mexico rate their community as good when it comes to being able to get to most of the places they wish to go.

Members were asked to rate their community on several characteristics. Seven in ten members rate their community as good when it comes to being able to get to most places they wish to go. Three in ten report that their community is good when it comes to offering dependable public transportation and offering convenient transportation for people with disabilities or health problems. Only one in five members reports their community provides a wide variety of services to maintain independence.

Legislative Priorities

Members list ensuring Social Security, making prescription drugs more affordable, and reducing the money in the political process as top priorities for AARP New Mexico.

Members were asked to indicate how much of a priority it should be for AARP New Mexico to work on various legislative issues. Members were given a list of 16 different issues. The most frequent issue that members mention as a top priority was ensuring that Social Security continues to provide a guaranteed base of retirement income. More than half mention making prescription drugs more affordable, reducing the influence of money in the political process, strengthening Medicare as a base for retirement health coverage, and protecting consumers from identity theft as top legislative priorities for AARP New Mexico.

Conclusions

The issue of transportation seems to be a relatively positive experience for most members in the state of New Mexico. The vast majority of members still drive when they need to go somewhere, and one in five walks or gets a ride with family or friends. Half of members in New Mexico are unfamiliar with Supplemental Transportation Programs that provide transportation for those with health or financial limitations, likely due to the fact that few of them require such services. In addition, the majority is satisfied with how they get around in the community, and rate their community positively when it comes to being able to get to most places they wish to go. These results suggest that transportation does not appear to be a pressing issue among members in New Mexico. However, when asked if they were no longer able to drive, seven in ten report that it would be difficult to live in their current neighborhood. This may be attributed to the fact that only three in ten report positively on the dependability of their community's public transportation system. These results suggest that although transportation is not a pressing issue for current members, it may be a potential issue when members are no longer able to drive.

In general, members' legislative priorities are consistent with AARP's strategic priorities in New Mexico. Specifically, members report that the highest priorities for AARP New Mexico should be Social Security, prescription drugs, and reducing the influence of money in the political process. The influence of money in the political process was not included in previous surveys and in 2006 emerged as one of the top priorities mentioned by members. The emergence of "money in the political process" suggests that this may be an increasingly important issue for members in New Mexico.

Methodology

AARP conducted the 2006 AARP New Mexico Legislative Issues Survey from June 9 through July 7, 2006. A sample of 2,000 AARP members in New Mexico, proportionally stratified by three age segments, 50 to 59, 60 to 74, and 75+, was selected from AARP's membership database. Each sampled member was contacted about the survey in four ways: a pre-notification postcard, the survey itself, a reminder postcard, and a second survey. Forty-nine percent of the sampled New Mexico members returned surveys by the cut-off date, providing 972 useable surveys for analysis. Thus, the survey has a sampling error of plus or minus 3.2 percent.² Survey responses were weighted to reflect the distribution of the age segments in the member population of New Mexico. As of September 2006, the approximate number of AARP members in New Mexico was 250,300.

²This means that in 95 out of 100 samples of this size, the results obtained in the sample would fall in a range of 3.2 percentage points of what would have been obtained if every AARP member in New Mexico age 50 or older had been surveyed.

32. "Clean Elections" laws that have passed in Maine and Arizona have given candidates for office the option to run using public funds exclusively, rather than relying on money from private donors and interest groups. To qualify for public funds, the candidates must first demonstrate popular support among voters in their districts in the form of a required number of signatures and agree to a number of rules including participating in debates and limiting their spending.

Two-thirds of the Maine legislature is now made up of legislators who ran for office using this "Clean Elections" system. Establishing a similar system for all New Mexico legislative and gubernatorial elections is estimated to cost each taxpayer in New Mexico $5 per year.
