RE: Key Findings from AARP Ohio Swing Voter Battleground Poll

Survey Background and Overview

The AARP Battleground Voter Survey provides a groundbreaking, unique view on the key electorate in the 2008 general election: the swing voters in the key battle ground state of Ohio. This survey is one of six polls conducted in the key swing states of Iowa, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Ohio, Florida, and Pennsylvania, and is the first of its kind this election. It provides important insights into the makeup of the swing voters, what issues are front and center for them, and how they view critical policy positions held by Senator McCain or Senator Obama.

This survey was conducted among 400 swing voters in Ohio. Within the Buckeye State, the survey focused exclusively on people who are either undecided in whom they will vote for in the Presidential election or express relatively weak support for a particular candidate.

At the very highest levels, the survey revealed several important and surprising findings that have significant implications for the election. Ohio swing voters are older, focused on the economy, financial and health care security issues, and do not feel that either candidate is adequately addressing these issues.

At the same time, the survey shows tremendous opportunity for both Senator McCain and Senator Obama. Swing voters in Ohio believe tackling these issues will take a bipartisan approach – and believe both Obama and McCain will work in a bi-partisan fashion if elected to office. When given descriptions of both candidates' positions on the key issues of healthcare and financial security, both candidates have policies that greatly appeal to these key voters and are likely to earn their support.

Fundamentally, this survey demonstrates that both candidates can reach the key swing voters this year and win their support – if they reach out to them by making lifetime financial security and healthcare a central element to their campaigns.

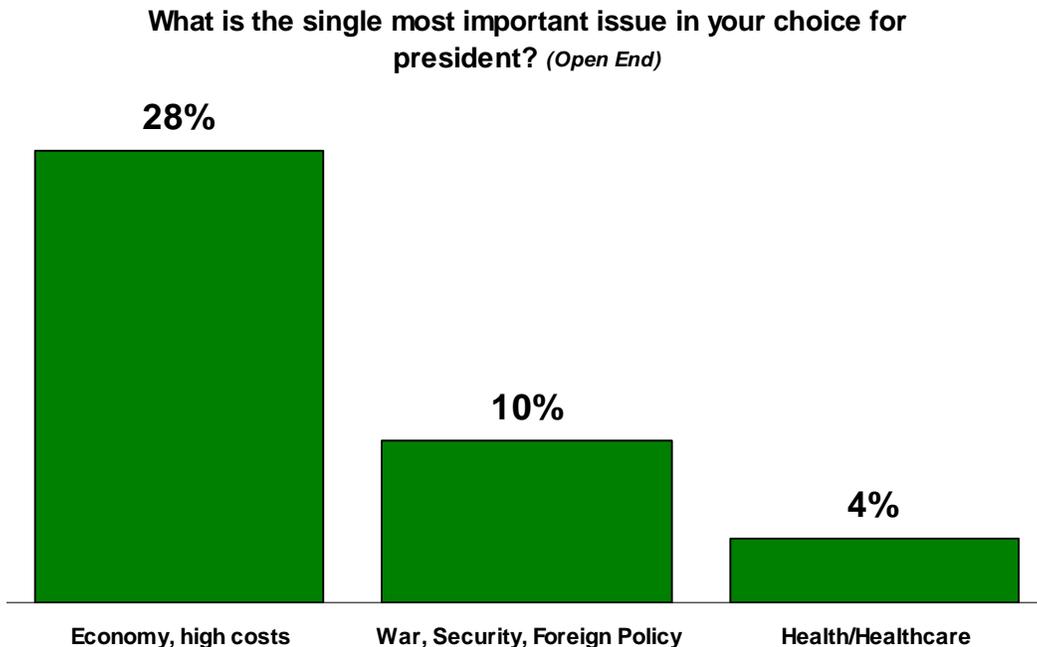

Who are the Swing Voters? White, Older, Lower-to-Middle Income, Independent, Women

For this survey, swing voters were defined as likely voters who are undecided in whom they will vote for President or are not strongly committed to any candidate. In Ohio, these swing voters are:

- 92% are white
- 70% are over 50, and 31% are over 65
- 66% report an annual family income of $60,000 or less
- 66% are female
- 39% are self-identified Independents
- 68% say they are absolutely certain to vote for President in November
- 35% are AARP members
- Lean conservative to moderate in their political ideology (40% conservative, 37% moderate, 15% liberal)

Swing Voters Worry About Financial Security and Healthcare

In general, swing voters in Ohio are very concerned about the economy, their financial security, and health care security. The economy is the number one most important issue for swing voters in the Buckeye State, and health/healthcare is number three.

Beyond that, this survey shows that these voters have serious concerns about their long-term financial and healthcare security:

- 87% are concerned about their personal financial security for retirement

- 60% are worried about Social Security being there when they retire.
- 84% believe we have an obligation to future generations to “protect Social Security,” and that it is the “cornerstone of the social compact in this country.”
- 95% agree that retiring with financial and health security is essential to the American dream, and this notion of promoting the American Dream makes 71% more likely to support fundamental changes in government programs, employer benefits, and personal behavior.
- 81% say it is our duty as Americans to make sure that retirees have financial and healthcare security.

Ohio Swing Voters Want More Information on these Issues from the Candidates

While financial security and healthcare are top-of-mind concerns for swing voters in Ohio, they do not feel the candidates are talking enough about them. An overwhelming majority of these voters, 76%, think that the candidates are only doing a fair or poor job of addressing healthcare and financial security issues.

At a time when the economy is struggling, neither Senator Obama nor Senator McCain has adequately addressed these key issues that are likely to have a significant impact on voters’ decisions.

In addition, 60% of Buckeye State swing voters say they are interested in learning more about the candidates’ positions on healthcare and financial security. 45% would be extremely or very interested in a candidate forum on financial security and healthcare issues sponsored by the AARP or similar non-profit organization.

Unlocking Swing Voters with Specific Proposals and Platforms

There is wide consensus among swing voters on ways to approach health care and financial security. We tested a series of eleven policy proposals, not ascribed to a candidate or party. Of these, the top scoring proposals among swing voters in Ohio were:

- 92% favor requiring clear explanations of healthcare costs so patients know how much they will be charged up front
- 90% favor establishing preventive care management to help people with multiple chronic illnesses receive better healthcare at a lower cost
- 90% favor making healthcare affordable for small businesses by allowing them to band together for lower rates, providing tax credits to offset employee premium contributions and protecting them from large rate increases simply because one employee gets sick

Both candidates would be well-served to incorporate these common-sense policy positions into their platforms.

Both Candidates Have Plans on these Topics that Appeal to Swing Voters

Although the candidates need to better articulate how they will address the issues of lifetime financial and healthcare security, each have compelling proposals that attract widespread support among swing voters in Ohio – if they make them more central to their respective campaigns.

We tested eight of Senator McCain’s policy proposals on health care and financial security. Of those, the proposals that best demonstrated the candidates’ commitment to providing lifetime financial and health security were:

- 63% believe McCain is committed to these issues when “his healthcare program will increase development of safer, cheaper, generic versions of drugs and will allow re-importation of drugs to help cut Americans’ healthcare costs”
- 61% believe this when they hear McCain’s plan “will help Americans save more for their retirement with low taxes on dividends and capital gains”
- 59% believe McCain is committed when they hear he “will make health insurance more affordable and available by providing individuals with a $2,500 tax credit and families a $5,000 tax credit”

We also tested eight proposals from Senator Obama on the same topics. Senator Barack Obama’s top scoring proposals score as follows:

- 73% believe Obama is committed to lifetime financial and health security when they hear he “will ensure that no one is denied insurance because of their health history”
- 68% believe Obama is committed to lifetime financial and health security when they hear he “will require insurance companies to cover proven preventive care services”
- 66% believe Obama is committed to lifetime financial and health security when they hear he “will allow Americans to buy into a health insurance plan similar to the one that every Congressman and federal employee has”

Swings Demand Bipartisanship to Solve these Issues

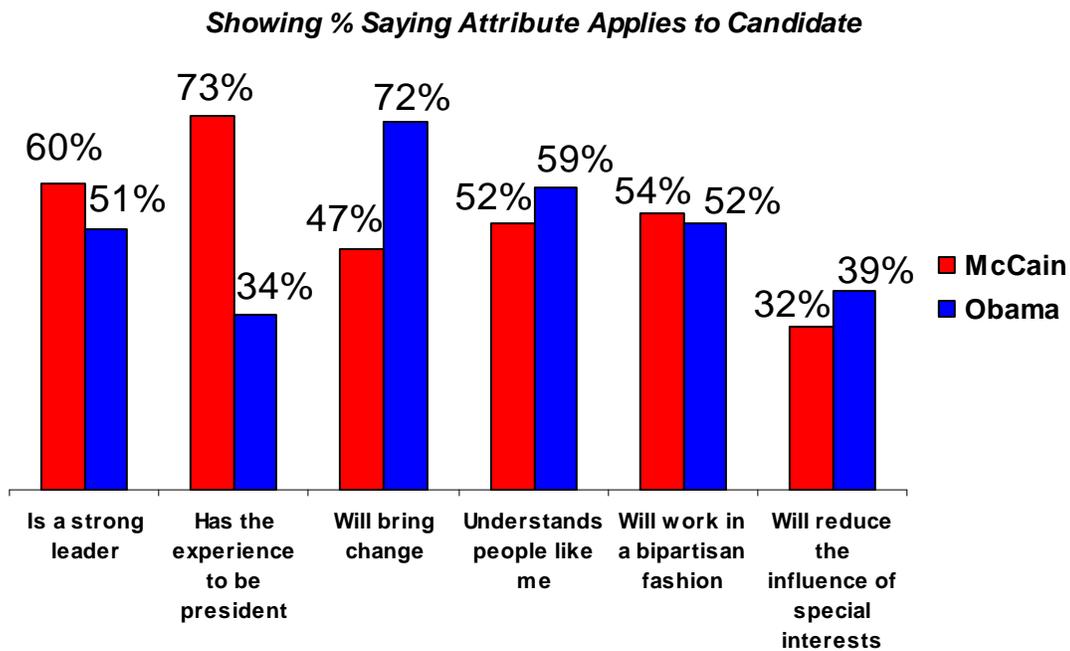

Buckeye State swing voters demand bipartisanship on these crucial issues of financial security and healthcare, as their appeal transcends political ideologies.

- 93% believe Social Security can be strengthened when both parties work together
- 92% believe our healthcare system can be improved by both parties working together
- 93% agree that healthcare and financial security are too big for any one candidate or party to fix and that in order to improve on these issues it has to be a truly bipartisan effort

Buckeye State Swing Voters Are Favorable to Obama and McCain

Overall, among all respondents in this survey, Senator McCain is viewed favorably by 60%, and Senator Obama is viewed favorably by 59%.

On key attributes, Ohio swing voters have an interesting perspective. Senator McCain leads on is a strong leader, has the experience to be president, and has a slight lead on will work in a bipartisan fashion, while Senator Obama leads on will bring change, understands people like me, and will reduce the influence of special interests.

In the end, both candidates are well-liked by Ohio swing voters and have centrist policies on lifetime financial and healthcare security that greatly appeal to these voters.

In this neck-and-neck race, the candidate that does the best job of championing these issues may be able to tip the balance of the election in their favor and determine the eventual winner of 2008 presidential election in Ohio and in the country overall.
